Chapter 1 by ERIC MARTINEZ

It was just an ordinary Saturday, people walking on the sidewalks and families going to fun activities. Unlike me, I was just being lazy in the family room. I was watching some TV in a dark room like always because I'm a person who stays in doors, while everyone is having fun. My mom kept on insisting me to go outside and make some friends but I decided not to. Making friends wasn't the easiest thing in my life, because my family is constantly moving. But this move gave me a weird feeling in my gut like I just got punched right into my stomach. I told mom but she wouldn't listen instead she continued to unpack boxes.

I stayed up late today instead of going to sleep, but it was the most confusing night ever in my life. I was playing some video games until I felt the ground shake but it was a different kind of shake like a giant was walking around and causing havoc. So I went outside to see what the commotion was and it was a giant white chicken that had red stuff coming out of it's mouth it could've been blood but I didn't know what to think. I had to think of something fast but what!
